Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: .of an ex-mayor of a city, and also from the standpoint of the general counsel of a contracting company engaged in laying pavements. I hope, therefore, to be able to discuss the question somewhat from both sides. There was one expression in that paper to which I desire, at the beginning, to record my most earnest approval, and that was the statement that every city should have a plant to look after the maintenance and repair of the streets of the city. The only amendment I could offer to that statement would be to add that that plant should be prepared not only to look after the maintenance and repair of the streets, but should be able to pave the streets. In my humble judgment, a city of 25,000 or 50,000 inhabitants that has no stone crusher, no road roller, no plant for the laying of...
